Slievenamon Wildfire remains stable as Emergency Services continue to manage isolated flare-ups

The overall situation on Slievenamon remains stable, with emergency services and partner agencies continuing to manage and monitor the affected area.

A small, localised fire has been identified on the western side of Slievenamon. Tipperary Fire and Rescue Service and Coillte are actively managing the situation, with the assistance of aerial support. There is currently no risk to life or property arising from this incident.

It is hoped that all remaining hotspots across the mountain will be brought under control over the coming days. The affected area will continue to be closely managed and monitored by Tipperary Fire and Rescue Service, Coillte and supporting agencies.

Outbreaks of fire activity and isolated flare-ups are to be expected following a wildfire event of this scale. It is anticipated that such flare-ups may continue until substantial rainfall is received to sufficiently dampen down the affected areas.

Tipperary Fire and Rescue Service has liaised with Met Éireann and, at present, only light showers are forecast in the coming days.

All reports of smoke or fire activity will continue to be assessed and responded to as required by emergency services.

Members of the public can be reassured that there is currently no risk to life or property.

The public is thanked for its continued cooperation, support and vigilance while monitoring and response operations continue.

Ends.
